S, s, indecl. a. or f. I. The nineteenth letter of the Latin alphabet, corresponding in form to the old Greek Σ for Ξ. As an initial and medial s has a hard sound, and is therefore joined only with the tenues (c, p, t).— As a medial, also written double after long vowels: causaa, causaa, divisiones (so wrote, for instance, Cicero and Virgil, acc. to Quint.). III. As a final, s has a softer sound, and therefore not only admitted the medial b before it (plebs, urbs, abs; Arabs, chalysae, etc.), but often entirely disappeared.
So in the ante-class. poets down to the early years of Cicero (and also in his own poem, entitled Aratus, written in his youth), before words beginning with a consonant, to avoid position: Ratē Romulus, Pulvī Nobilior, gravi Terra, est satī bella, Ilyperoni curam Virgine' nam adi, etc.; less freq.
before words beginning with a vowel, in which case, to avoid hiatus, the vowel before s was also elided; cau- aryntes for vastis argentea.—Final s is also elided (and the preceding vowel either dropped with it or weakened) in the forms sat from satis; mage from magis; in the neut. forms of adjectives of the 3d declension, acre, agreste, facie; in the collateral forms of the 2d Pers. Sing. Pass., fallere, fallere, fallere, etc.; in the Gen.
Sing. of the 1st, 2d, and 5th declension, and in the Nom. Plur. of the 1st and 2d declension (aerai for aera-is, analog. to regis, etc.).—Lastly, s disappears in the forms, abin', acin', uden', scin', from ablene, sciene, vid- ene, satiene, etc. IV. S appears as an equivalent for the aspirate in many words of Greek origin; semi-, serpo, ser, super, corresp. to σμι-, σπρω-, σέρω, etc.—It is also prefixed to some words obtained from Greek originals which take the soft breathing: si (old form sei), sero, segesta, corresp. to σι, ΕΡΩ (whence ερω), Εγρετα.—Less freq. in radical words beginning with a consonant: sculpo corresp. to σκληρω; scribo, to γραφω.—To soften the termination, s appears in abs, = ab, and ex corresp. to εξ.—Sometimes, on the contrary, an initial s appears in Greek, where the corresponding Latin word has not taken the s: Lat. fallo, Gr. σφάλω. V. S is interchanged:

A. Most freq. with r; see that letter, no. II.—B. With d: Claudius, from the Sabine Clausus; and, on the other hand, rosa, corresp. to the Gr. ῥόδον.
—C. With t: tensus and lentus; resina corresp. to ῥητινῆ; and, on the contrary, meritare, pullare, for mersure, pulsare. VI. S is assimilated before f in the compounds of dis: differo, difficilis, diffuso, etc.; v. 3. dis.—On the other hand, it arises by assimilation from d, in assum, assumo, cecidi, for adsum, adsumo, cecidi; from t in fassus, from faleor; from b in juasi, from jubeo; from m in pressi, from premo; from r in gressi, from gero; and dossu- rum, from dorsum. VII. As an abbreviation, S denotes sacrum, semis, sibi, suus; S. C., senatusconsultum;
S. P., sub pecunia; S. P. Q. R., Senatus Populusque Romanus, etc.

T, t, indecl. n. or f. The twentieth letter of the Latin alphabet: I. As an initial, it is, in pure Latin words, followed by no other consonant than r: traho, tremo; the combinations ti and ti are found only in words borrowed from the Greek: Tiēpoclemus, tmesis, Timolus. Hence an initial t before i is rejected: lātus (Part. of fero) for tlatus; and even when softened by a syllable, the combination of t and i in stata (genus navigi), sternōnis (genus cardus), stilla, alocia, was avoided in the best period of the language, and, with the exception of Jud lang., which retained stiltibus judicandis, the forms lis, locus remained the only ones in use. II. T is interchanged with c, d, s; see those letters. III. T is assimilated to s in quatio, quæsi; fateor, fassus; mitto, misera.—It is wholly suppressed before s in uas, from utor; also in many nominatives of the third declension ending in s: civitas (theme CVITAT), Gens, civitates, quies (QUIET, quæta), and likewise in flexi, flexus, from flexo; and in other like forms. V

V, v, v, ind., or f, the twenty-second letter of the Latin alphabet. The character is derived from the Greek Υ. Although it was originally written with the same sign as the vowel u, it was by the ancients themselves considered as essentially different from it. I. In sound V corresponds to the Æolic digamma; hence, it is called, in Quintilian, Æolica littera. By its affinity of the v to the digamma is explained the frequent occurrence of an initial or medial v in Latin words whose Greek equivalents have an initial or medial vowel; cf., ver, ῥῆ; vias, ῖ; levia, λεῖος. II. V has the closest affinity to the vowel u, and hence, in the course of composition and inflection, it often passed into the latter: solv, solutum, caveo, cautum, etc. III. V as a medial between two vowels was very frequently elided, and the word underwent a greater or less contraction: amavisti, amasti; novisti, novisti; vis, vis. The designation of the number five by the letter V does not strictly belong here, it being rather a representation of the half of X.

Y, y, a. indecl. or f. A Greek letter (the twenty-fourth of the Latin Alphabet), which was introduced only at a late period into the Latin orthography for words borrowed from the Gr.—the place of the Gr. Υ being previously filled by U. Thus, according to the express testimony of Cicero, Ennius wrote Burrus for Pyrrhus, and Bruges for Phryges; and as the borrowed words belonging to the oldest period of the formation of the language have either constantly preserved u for the Greek υ, as calvus from καλός, mus from μῦς, etc.; or this u has afterwards changed into i, as lactuca, securus, lactuca, from λακκουα. Sometimes, also, e took the place of the υ, as sorex from σπαρ, salum from σάλας, and, shortening a long vowel, ancora from ἄγκυρα, like the preceding lactuca from λακκουα. In Cicero's time y seems to have been already in use; but its application was restricted to foreign words, and hence the spellings Bylia, Tybris, pyrum, satyra, etc., are to be rejected.

Z

ENGLISH-LATIN DICTIONARY

FOR THE USE OF JUNIOR STUDENTS

FOUNDED ON WHITE AND RIDDLE'S LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY

PREFACE.

IN UNDERTAKING the preparation of a NEW ENGLISH-LATIN DICTIONARY for Schools, it has been my aim to produce a work presenting a sufficiently extensive Vocabulary, clearness in general details, and trustworthy authority for the use of the Latin equivalents for English words. The way, in which I have endeavoured to carry out my object, may be seen in the following description of the plan which has been adopted.

All English words likely to occur in passages not too difficult for translation by any but the higher forms have been admitted into this Dictionary. Whenever they are here employed in two or more meanings their respective powers are defined. In the case of a word used only in one sense, if its intention seemed likely to prove not quite obvious to a young mind, it is explained. The present names of cities, mountains, rivers, etc., remarkable in Ancient Geography are mostly given; and places of note in modern times, especially those in Great Britain, have not been left unnoticed. Neither have the names of persons been passed over, when it seemed desirable to admit them.

In the Latin portion of the work, WHITE AND RIDDLE'S LARGE LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY has been taken as the authority for all matters coming within its range of treatment; while for the employment of late Latin terms, when such are introduced, reference has been made to recognized sources of information. Every Latin word, or phrase, here cited, is followed by the name of some one, or more, of the best writers who employ it; so that it may at once be seen, whether it belongs to prose or to poetry alone, or, whether it is common to both of them; and, also, to what age of the language it is to be assigned. Further still, in order that this work may be available for all the legitimate purposes of a GRADUS, the prosodia quantities of words are marked.

Moreover, as this work is essentially one largely partaking of an elementary character, it has been submitted to a mode of treatment corresponding to its intention. The conjugation and class of verbs, the genitive case and gender of substantives, and the several terminations of the nominative case of both particples and adjectives, have been uniformly given. Such a precaution against possible errors on the part of young translators will not, I imagine, be deemed useless by those who have had experience in teaching.

The foregoing, then, is the plan of this work, and for it I alone am responsible. For its execution, however, I have sought and obtained the assistance of scholars who either are now, or have been at some former time, practically engaged in tuition. All of them are Graduates of either Oxford or Cambridge, and all have been distinguished in their University career. To the whole of them my thanks are both due and tendered for their cordial co-operation in the preparation of this Dictionary. It would have afforded me much pleasure to have named each one of them; but I confine myself to the mention of four of their number, whose more extended participation in the work demands a more especial notice on my part. These are : —

THOMAS CHARLES FRY, Esq., B.A.	Late Scholar of Pembroke College, Cambridge.
REV. CHARLES HAWKINS, B.C.L.	Formerly Fell Scholar of Christ-Church, Oxford.
GEORGE FREDERIC WARNER, Esq., B.A.	Late Scholar of Pembroke College, Cambridge.
REV. JOHN DANIEL WILLIAMS, M.A.	Head-Master of Christ College, Brecknock; formerly Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Bell's University Scholar.

While I thus recognize the services rendered by the Contributors to the work, I also gladly avail myself of the present opportunity of acknowledging the able assistance of the Reader of the proof-sheets. As he is a ripe scholar, and possesses a more than ordinary knowledge of the Latin poets, I have every reason to hope, and believe, that a high degree of accuracy has been secured in the printing of the book, both as to things in general, and also, more especially, with regard to the marking of the quantities of Latin words.
